Composed of the contributions of a number of talented young student-professionals, this unique book tells how work in this area is being done rather than how it could or should be done. Sections are included on therapeutic recreation for the physically disabled, mentally retarded, elderly, and the emotionally and socially maladjusted. Additional chapters present fresh viewpoints on the approaches and concerns of this rapidly growing discipline. Something new and singularly practical is offered to the entire spectrum of professionals in the human disability specialties, from therapists and counselors to administrators and social workers.
